

Many things that were forgotten now have appeared in a different light. There are again desolate shop windows with „To let” written on them; there is revival of small farmer markets in block house communities, in some places even milk cisterns and salesmen from country side can be seen; such local buzz has not been there for a long time.

Maybe these are emptier parking lots that tell us about Riga more precisely or just on the contrary- more crowded trolleys and trams and traffic stops consequently. The task of photographers is with the help of light to notice and fix what the city looks like today in all its expressions.
